"Elizabeth is an experienced CMO and entrepreneur with proven results at both Fortune 100 and small start-up companies, and we are delighted that she has joined KVH," says Martin Kits van Heyningen, KVH chief executive officer. "Her expertise includes brand building, new product development, corporate and marketing strategy, and market research across many industries."

Ms. Jackson has worked at a variety of companies including Proctor & Gamble, Campbell Soup Company, Summer Infant, and HookLogic, a Bain Capital Ventures portfolio company in ad tech performance marketing. Most recently, Ms. Jackson was CMO at DOTS Technology Corp, an NEA portfolio company in health tech, building a novel protein detection platform for consumer and industrial use.

"I am very excited to join KVH and direct the marketing efforts for such an innovative company, especially one that is active in so many vital markets," says Ms. Jackson. "From the mobile technology that provides connectivity to commercial mariners around the globe to the inertial navigation systems that support the emerging world of unmanned and autonomous platforms, KVH is a leader."

Ms. Jackson has a B.A. from Princeton University and an MBA from INSEAD in France.
